INTRODUCTION

Defendants Google LLC, Google Ireland Limited, Google Commerce Ltd., Google Asia Pacific Pte Ltd., Alphabet Inc., and Google Payment Corp. (collectively “Google”) answer Consumer Plaintiffs’ Consolidated First Amended Class Action Complaint, through its undersigned counsel, as set forth below.

Android, Google’s open-source mobile operating system (“OS”), is a critical source of competition against other operating systems. This competition has brought tremendous benefits to developers and users. By providing Android to smartphone manufacturers for free, Google LLC has expanded access to smartphones and the marketplace for mobile apps, creating enormous incentives for developers to invest in apps that make virtually every sector of the economy more efficient, affordable and accessible for users. These benefits have typically come at little or no cost to smartphone manufacturers, developers or users. Google’s app store, Google Play, which works on Android, created an innovative channel for the distribution and use of software apps, and a leading source of critical competition to Apple’s iOS ecosystem and App Store. Android and Google Play have been widely embraced not because of anticompetitive conduct, but because users and developers prefer Google Play when given a choice among Android app stores and distribution channels. Android device manufacturers can choose to pre-install their own or third-party app stores on Android devices, right alongside Google Play, and over 60% of Android devices come with more than one app store pre-installed. And Android users are free to download apps and app stores directly from the Internet; millions do so every day.

Far from generating anticompetitive harm, Android and Google Play bring enormous benefits to developers and users—and they do so at zero cost to users and minimal cost to developers, including the States, in the vast majority of cases. Plaintiff States’ suit threatens to undermine, rather than enhance, the very competition that has brought these benefits, and harm the same consumers the States purport to represent.
